Troy's Summary

There has been discovery of compelling evidence that Earth is not the only planet with liquid water. Researchers have found that marks were formed on the surface of Mars from salt water flowing downhill.

The discovery of water on Mars is still in the very formative stages, and there are plenty of unknowns. However, it is an extremely thrilling time for scientists, entrepreneurs and science fiction geeks alike. If Mars can support microbial life, that could present very interesting opportunities for people seeking new frontiers.

“Martian,” a movie that has recently hit the theaters involves an astronaut/botanist stranded on Mars. This scientist is alone on Mars and has to find a way to survive in its very uninhabitable terrain. The film is praised for its accurate depiction of science. For example, potatoes are grown in this movie, and scientists believe that it would be possible to grow certain plants on Mars. The news of the discovery on water and the release of the film is sheer coincidence. However, humans setting foot on Mars in the near future may end up being more than just science fiction.
