Summary

Often it happens that celebrities in Korea have their names posted in the national or society sections of a daily newspaper rather than the entertainment section. In only the past month, we have heard multiple news reports about sexual assault charges or drunk driving cases involving comedians and K-pop stars. We hear so many of these stories that, for many celebrities, having one's name defamed seems almost like a rite of passage.

Celebrity gossip is everywhere. We hear even more ridiculous stories about Hollywood celebrities. Some say the Korean public applies too strict a standard to celebrities for their behavior. People who are artistically inclined become actors and singers, and these talented individuals tend to lack in self-discipline. So, it's these celebrities' temperament that makes them more prone to mistakes.

Others say, more persuasively, that we shouldn't apply different criteria specific to celebrities, especially when their wrongdoings can be considered a crime. Furthermore, these individuals are worshipped by mostly teenagers and young adults. Don't they have an obligation to serve as an example to their young fans?

Nobody's perfect, and everybody deserves to be punished only to the extent of their wrongdoing. But would it be too much to ask celebrities to have normal moral standards, even if not perfect ones?
