Summary

In summer of last year, the police arrested a woman who took a video of other women in the shower room of a water park. She had committed the crime in exchange for money from a man who wanted to sell the video. This story was scary to many who wanted to enjoy their summer at water parks.

Many such voyeurs in our society are taking advantage of modern technology to commit crimes that violate people's privacy. Most women are worried that they could easily fall prey to hidden cameras in public places. It's not rare to see news footage of police using detectors in public restrooms to find them.

And now, yet another of these stories has hit news headlines. A former Korean national team swimmer is under police investigation for installing a hidden camera in a fitting room for his female counterparts. Crimes involving hidden cameras indeed seem to have no boundaries. As it's not difficult to buy one, easy accessibility to hidden cameras is one of the enablers for the constant occurrence of crimes in which they are used. If the law as it stands is insufficient to keep those peeping Toms at bay, the only choice we have may be to enforce harsher punishments.
