Summary

Recent arrests of celebrities have been made in connection with the use of methamphetamine. Park Yoo Chun, Hwang Ha-Na and naturalized Korean citizen Robert Holley were in the news in association with methamphetamine. It is known as its street name "crystal meth" or just "meth". The drug is commonly called "piliopon" in Korea. Crystal meth delivers a euphoric feeling when smoked, snorted or shot directly into a vein. Other effects include alertness and the ability to overcome fatigue.

The dangers of meth may not look very serious when the user first takes the drug. However, prolonged use of the drug can keep the user up for days without sleep, causing the user to experience psychotic episodes and become violent. In the long term, the drug can cause serious bodily harm.

Around the world, crystal meth is seen mostly as a poor person's drug. It has been called "the poor man's coke" because it is much cheaper to buy than cocaine. However, due to its high street value in Korea, the drug has been financially out of reach for most Koreans and has established itself as a rich person's party drug. But this doesn't seem to be the case anymore. The number of those accused of using illegal drugs is steadily on the rise, including meth users. Also, it has become easier to have access to meth online. The celebrities in the news are known to have gone online and set up a dead drop where the drugs can be picked up.

This is not the first time that Koreans heard about celebrities involved in illegal drug use. The public's belief is that regardless of one's occupation or social status, everyone should be aware of the danger of illegal drugs and violators should be punished accordingly.
