Summary

In the 2019 Cannes Film Festival, Korean director Bong Joon Ho's dark comedy "Parasite" received the Palme d'Or, which is the highest honor in the festival. The Cannes Film Festival, the Berlin International Film Festival and the Venice Film Festival are known as top three international film awards. This is the first time a Korean movie won the Palme d'Or. Previously, Korean director Kim Ki Duk's "Pieta" won in Venice back in 2012. "Parasite" also broke the record by being sold to 192 countries around the world. The highest mark to date was Park Chan Wook's "Handmaiden", which was sold to 176 countries.

The movie's also faring well in the Korean box office. In the first weekend after the release, Parasite attracted more than two million viewers. Director Bong is known to be a critically acclaimed auteur who also enjoys commercial success. His ever-increasing momentum as an author and a popular director has been accelerated by this new film. Critics say the topic of collision between a rich and a poor family is well-timed in this era of economic polarization. Viewers of the movie say that the dark satire of the film leaves a bitter taste in the mouth when they leave the theater.

Movie lovers in Korea are curious about how many viewers the movie will attract. Also, many of Bong's fans are already so curious about what's going to be next on the list of his masterpieces.
