Summary

On June 25th of this year, Korean drivers face more strict regulations about drunk driving. Under a new, so-called Yoon Chang Ho Law, driving even after one shot of soju or one beer can put you over the legal limit to get you a DUI. The law is named after a victim who lost his life in a drunk driving accident.

The danger of drunk driving cannot be overstated, but we still see many cases of DUI accidents. Unlike in the past, driving service agencies have become very common in Korea, but there are still many who get behind the wheel after drinking, and we don't see a dramatic drop in the number of DUI cases. The new law that contains stricter rules and more severe punishments is expected to raise public awareness and help reduce the cases.

Under the new law, you should be careful, as you can be punished for drunk driving even the morning after drinking. With a blood alcohol level of 0.03 percent and above, you will have your license suspended. Blood alcohol level of 0.03 can be detected even when you don't feel hungover. You may feel sober, but if you drank last night, you'd better leave your car at home.

People hope the new law will help reduce the number of DUI cases and lower the drunk driving fatality rates.
