Summary

On TV news reports and newspapers, we bump into various murder cases, but a recent one by a 36-year-old woman Koh Yu-jeong made many people speechless. She was arrested for allegedly killing her ex-husband after adding a sleep-inducing drug into his meal. What was so horrific about the crime was how she disposed of the body. She is suspected to have dismembered the body and threw them into the ocean or garbage dumps. The police are still looking for the remains, but Koh remains silent on the exact locations.

What makes the public also suspicious is the story about the son of Koh's current husband from a previous marriage. The son, who was 5 at the time, was said to have died from unintentional suffocation by his father who was sleeping next to him. The case has a lot of holes in it, and it is suspected that Koh might have had something to do with the boy's death. Experts say that she's suffering from mental problems, most likely borderline personality disorder.

Hearing about reports that seem right out of a horror film, we get to ask some questions: How cruel can humans get? Should the gruesome murder cases be attributed only to the mental problems of the perpetrators, or is it because of cruelty hidden somewhere in the human mind? Whatever the answers could be, what's clear is that the murderer should be brought to justice.
